WILL CONNECTICUT PRESCHOOL PROGRAMS ADVANCE? *Budget Cuts Loom at a Time When Other States are Increasing Funding

Washington, D.C — State funded preschool education, hard hit by the Great Recession, has turned the corner and in many states is back on an expansion track according to the national survey of the states done annually by the nonpartisan National Institute for Early Education Research (NIEER) at Rutgers University. For the second year in a row, NIEER's data show that, nationally speaking, the states have increased funding for pre-K.

Adjusted for inflation, state funding for pre-K increased by nearly $120 million in 2013-2014 across all 50 states and Washington, DC. Enrollment growth also resumed, albeit modestly, with a total increase of 8,335 slots to reach its highest level recorded over the report's 12-year history. And program quality standards increased as an unprecedented seven states gained ground on NIEER's 10 benchmarks for quality standards.

Connecticut ranks 29th in the nation for access to state pre-K, leaving the state in the bottom half of states for access, with only 14 percent of 4-year-olds enrolled. The state ranks 4th in the nation for state spending per child, at $8,906. The pre-K program adds significant funds from other sources, for an all-source ranking of 3nd.

The Constitution State serves 6 percent of its 3-year-olds in pre-K, ranking 12th. Quality standards were unchanged from the previous year at just 6 of 10 benchmarks. In 2014, Connecticut was awarded a competitive federal Preschool Development Grant for $12.5 million, a positive sign. However, in April, Governor Malloy announced millions in budget cuts, including $5.8 million from the Office of Early Childhood raising questions about the state's commitment to Pre-K progress.

“Elsewhere, it is heartening to see state funded pre-K, once the fastest growing area in the entire education sector, back on the road to recovery,” said NIEER director Steve Barnett, “but given that the states cut half a billion dollars in funding in 2011-2012 and a number of states have yet to address those cuts, much work remains to be done.”

Joined at the press conference by U.S. Secretary of Education Arne Duncan, Barnett called on all levels of government to dedicate additional resources to preschool education in order to bridge the gap. "Unfortunately, the effects of the recession landed hardest on preschool-age children and our future prosperity depends on their future productivity," he said.

Barnett said that in addition to adequate funding, state pre-K should have adequate quality and serve all children under 200 percent of poverty. Bold leaders from both major parties are moving some cities and states dramatically ahead, but far too many states have yet to follow. As some cities move to provide preschool for all, most recently New York and Seattle; other areas of their states are left behind. At the same time, quality preschool is becoming a right for every child in some states; other states offer their children no pre-K at all.
